

KIDNEY TROUBLE

Suffered Two Years—Relieved In Three Months

M. E. FIZER, Mt. Sterling, Ky.

"I have suffered with kidney and bladder trouble for ten years past. Last March I commenced using Doan's and continued for three months. I have not used it since, nor have I felt any more of the trouble."

"I believe that I am well and I therefore give my highest commendation to the curative qualities of Doan's."

THE IDEAL LADY

By Kathleen Whitebury Gilbert

(Copyright, by Joseph H. Bowles)

The station was crowded. The out-going train had not a vacant seat; distracted folks flew from door to door, tearing them open, and before even looking to see if the car contained an empty place, flying impatiently to the next. There were, of course, the usual number of persons to whom it was a necessity that this particular train should not be missed, and who preferred to stand to being left languishing on the platform.

Among these the catching of this train meant much to a tall, slender, brown-eyed girl, who jumped with agility upon the platform almost as the train stopped. Entering the car, she opened a book and stood with an expression of determination to stand or die.

She had not closed the door behind her before she had recognized in the train a young girl who had often given up her seat for her before. She had not read a word of her book before she had risen, with a cheerful smile, and beckoned to his vacant place.

In course of time the other passengers alighted one by one, and these two found themselves almost alone.

It was a glorious autumn evening, about six o'clock. She sat in her corner, her head bent over her book, the vivid colors of the setting sun turning her brown hair into red gold. He sat in the corner opposite, his eyes fixed on a story which he had taken from the car. She sat so that her face was three-quarters towards him, her head bent, and her simple cotton gown falling gracefully about her.

Unaware of his intent scrutiny, she started in surprise when suddenly moving to the seat opposite her, he asked: "May I borrow your book?"

"You may borrow it, but I don't think it very good of me if I asked you to let me draw you. Just now, as you sit there."

She raised her eyes and looked at him. She had considered him a good-looking young man, but now she could see a sensitive, creamy expression in his eyes and around his mouth, that stamped him an artist. She was so surprised that she could say nothing and he went on:

"I really wouldn't be a bother to you, you see, and you don't know what it would mean to me."

He had already whipped out notebook and pencil, and his long fingers twirled as though anxious to begin. She looked at him with a chilly smile. "It's a very odd thing to ask," she began lightly.

"You know I need not have said anything at all about it. But I did not like to see you so much, and I thought it would have seemed like stealing."

There was something so astonishing in this shy becoming bold that she girl laughed in spite of herself.

"Very well," she said, and dropping her eyes on her book, apparently gave up her whole attention as before.

But the book might have been upside down for all she could make of it. The words danced about in front of her, and the sentences jumped themselves together. It was with the greatest exertion of will power that she kept her eyes lowered at all. She longed to see what these clever-looking fingers would make of her.

"Oh—dear!" came in a voice of such heart-breaking appeal, as she prepared to depart.

"This is my station. I am going," she said, as the train began to slacken speed.

"Oh, no. Not just yet," he cried, with a ring of despair in his voice.

Emphatically to feel angry, the girl looked up at him once more. She would never have thought his face capable of such expression and power.

While she looked she hesitated, and the train had stopped. He rose and she sank back ashamed into her corner. He drew on almost savagely, covering his face with the pages of the notebook with the wrong ideas.

She was not until the next station was reached and he opened the door and stepped out to assist her, that he spoke:

"I shall never forget what you have done for me to-day," he said. "I only hope you will forgive me."

When next they met, some long months later, they stood side by side before a picture—the picture. It was at a certain art exhibition, and the young artist, from whose face she had hungered watching the different effects his work had on the more or less casual spectators, had suddenly turned his head to the door and seen her come in. She had walked straight to his end of the gallery, and stood motionless before the picture.

He came to her side, and with something like an apology for speaking on his face, began:

answered, "and too little of the flesh and blood me."

He looked from one to the other critically, then said, blantly: "I see what you mean; all the same I don't think so. That is you to me."

They stood before the picture a few minutes longer, then he said: "There are some gems of miniatures in the little room over there; will you come and see them?"

She looked around; her family had wandered away; so she figuratively snatched her fingers at the prudent, snail self who wanted to make her listen to the voice of Mrs. Grundy, and took his proffered arm.

They went to this room, but they took very little notice of the "gems." He pushed a chair forward, and she obediently sat in it.

"I really feel I ought to say something about the very unusualness of my proceeding, that day last year," he said; "only I don't know where to begin."

"Oh, it's all done now," she said, hurriedly. "It cannot be helped."

"It was an irresistible impulse to draw you—" he began.

"Oh! but that's not me," she said, firmly. "I really make no pretensions of being that girl. She is far too beautiful, too wonderfully beautiful," she finished, frankly. "I don't quite understand it," she added, reflectively; "there is a mystery in that face, something that I believe will haunt me till I know the meaning. Will you explain it to me?"

"It is unexplainable," he answered, quietly.

"It was a great liberty to take with my face," she said, laughing, rather hysterically, "putting riddles into it. I was, I believe, generally I am afraid, a sneak things all too clearly."

Presently he looked up at her with something of the boyish expression once more on his face.

"It is a curious thing," he said mustily, "our being thrown together."

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

EFFECTIVE LOG DRAG.

Attached to the Wagon Gear Is Better Than When Hitched Directly to Team.

The improvement of the log drag is suggested by W. L. Bower, of Kentucky, in the Prairie Farmer. It will be noted from the accompanying illustration that instead of hitching the team to the drag itself he fastens the drag to the wagon gear. It is apparent that the drag can thus be hauled more easily and that the team is not hauled directly to the team.

Writing of his success in leveling down the loose ground with this improvement, Mr. Bower says: "I have made a better road with two loads of gravel dragged along."

METHOD OF ATTACHING LOG TO SIDE BY SIDE BY USING THIS LEVER ON IT.

than the other fellows have been able to do with three loads dumped in the same space on which the lever was not used.

"If I get my road too sharp I place my stick squarely across the road behind the wagon and then cut the corner of the drag, it can be made to go into almost any position desired or cut deeper in certain places."

"Suppose that it is desired that the log should be cut at the right of the wagon at a distance further out than what the drag would naturally do. If the driver will stop upon the stick at a point somewhere near the right end of the drag, it is clear that his weight will not cause the drag to swerve more to the right, but will cause the stick to cut deeper into the soil."

"On the other hand, suppose that it is desired that the drag should cut nearer to the middle of the track. Then the rider must stand somewhere nearer to the left end of the drag. The reader will readily understand what the result will be when the weight of a man is placed at different points of the drag."

More than this, different effects can be made by lengthening and shortening the longer chain. Obviously the angle at which the drag is drawn will determine to some extent where the drag will work."

It will be noted from the illustration that Mr. Bower does not use a "split log," but rather a solid stick of timber. It will be plain to be seen, however, that the "split log" could be readily substituted for the solid stick, and probably more effective work could be done.

There will be little trouble in attaching such a drag to the wagon gear. In comparison to the stowaway effect the extra drag of the wagon gear would probably amount to practically nothing.

A ROAD PLANE. Implement Which an Ohio Farmer Is Using to Keep the Highways in Repair.

Upon the highways adjoining our farm, we are using a road plane that keeps the roads in excellent condition for the traveling public, and is but very little labor for us, says George W. Brown, of Mount Carey, O., in writing to Farm Journal. This implement is made of two solid oak planks, 2x4 inches and nine feet in length, set up edgewise and framed together by 2x1 scantling, braced in the back with short iron braces. The lower edges of the plank are beveled upon the back, and are shod by bolting on tire iron from discarded grain drill wheels. An eyer and doubler taken from a harrow completes the outfit. We hitch our team to this plane and drag it down one side of the roadway and back the other side, grading all the dirt to the center of the track. When rains come, the water quickly runs from the roadway and leaves it in good condition for travel.

Low Heads for Fruit Trees. I have no arbitrary height at which fruit trees should be headed; my height below 24 inches will do. This may seem too low to most people, especially those who are in the habit of growing and pruning apple trees into forest trees. But bear in mind that we want an apple tree and not a forest tree, that we want fruit and plenty of it, and not fire wood. The nursery-men are willing to supply low-headed trees if we demand them, but as long as we prefer fishing poles and whips, we will be served with them. It may cost more to grow low-headed, stumpy trees, since a fewer number are grown in a given area. It demands more labor, but the time is at hand when the fruit grower is willing to pay if he can get what he wants.—Prof. E. P. Sandsten, Wisconsin.

Animal Hospital in India. There is an animal hospital at Lodepur, near Calcutta, where there are usually about 1,000 animals under treatment—horses, oxen, mules, elephants, dogs and even sheep—all comfortably housed and looked after by a staff of 80 native "nurses," under the orders of a British veterinary surgeon.

All Over. Hubby—I don't see why you shouldn't exert yourself to make me happy. Wife—Why, of all things! You know you told me when I accepted you that I had made you the happiest man on earth. What is the use of my trying to improve on that?—Stray Stories.

Coddling moths: This is the pest that causes wormy apples. As soon as the blossoms fall, spray the trees with the Bordeaux-arsenate mixture. Repeat in ten days. Now don't delay. The work must be done right after the falling of the blossoms.—Prairie Farmer.

Unless sheep are caught with a crook, more or less wool will be wasted in shearing—hence. Sheep and lambs caught by hand often lose handfuls of fleece.

Beauty at Small Cost. All who live in the free, beautiful country, adorn their yards with beauty that cost them nothing, except the pleasure of gathering them. I go to the woods and get the most beautiful ferns of all kinds, and pretty white and blue violets, small trees, etc., and plant them; and they more in repaying me.

In the writing of the yearly ravages of insect pests the D. of A. assumes that on an average 10 per cent. of every crop is lost through insect ravages.
